

Dear Charles,

Our warmest thoughts are with former PRS member Arthur Comings, who was recently injured in an automobile-pedestrian accident, and send our hopes for his full recovery during this difficult time for him.

This past month I introduced Claudia for her book launch party in Stinson Beach. In the near future I will inform the Berkeley Civic Arts Committee about Pacific Rim Sculptors and explore possibilities for future exhibition ventures.

Your President,
Anya Sophe Behn

Special Event: Steven Oliver Ranch Tour

PRS members will have a rare opportunity to tour the Steven Oliver Ranch Sculpture Collection on Sunday, October 4, 2015 beginning at 10 AM. Advance registration and ticket purchase is essential. Participants MUST travel as a group by a hired bus. Individuals CANNOT drive separately to the site; they will be denied entry to the ranch.

Steven Oliver or a trained docent will guide the 2.5+ hour tour and speak about this astonishingly unique private collection. Several members of our group toured the ranch several years ago and had a spectacularly good time.

We will begin accepting reservations soon. As a bonus, the Steven Oliver Ranch will donate the fees to PRS to support our programming, so we all benefit from the best possible attendance. So please invite your friends to attend with you; the more tickets we sell, the better for PRS!

VOLUNTEER OPPORTUNITY: We need up to three volunteers to help coordinate this special event (and receive discounted tickets). PRS officers and Administrator will work closely with you on this. Tasks will involve some telephone calls and/or email and distribution

Showing Sculpture in Non-traditional Spaces, Part I

Exhibiting ones sculpture in alternative venues is an unusual experience worth exploring. PRS member Paul Baker has been doing such exploration, including a solo exhibition in an ad agency lobby (below).

More recently, Paul and an artist colleague mounted a show in a 4-chair hair salon in a neighborhood near the Panhandle of San Francisco's Golden Gate Park. He observed several pro's and con's of the experience, summarized below.

On the POSITIVE side, it is relatively easy to assemble a one- or two-person show; the two-person format helpfully splits the work with a buddy; and it is also a great way to build your resume. And the fact is, it can make an unusual show -- a chance to do something really different from beginning to end. The art, venue and neighborhood all create great PR angles. That 'splash' can be a big plus for the venue, placing them on the map for the neighborhood, and giving people a reason to visit. The venue can play it up if it becomes a recurring event ("... be sure to visit our art opening next month . . .").

On the NEGATIVE side, don't kid yourself; it will cost you some, and it will require a good bit of work. Unconventional venues don't know the work involved in art openings and may feel, perhaps correctly, they are already doing enough by providing the space. Unless specifically negotiated, expect to cover all additional costs (invitations, postcards, opening reception supplies, refreshments, beverages, etc.) You will need to be well organized and expect to do most of the work yourself.

In upcoming issue we'll hear Paul's observations about some important planning matters when working with alternative venues, and also about using video in promotion of ones art.

Dusty Clay Diaries, Part I

As a 2014-15 Fulbright-Nehru Scholar to India, PRS member Cynthia Siegel followed her passion and fascination for clay sculptural traditions in which the completed artworks are intentionally left unfired. Often these works are made in conjunction with religious festivals, and at the ending ceremonies they are submerged into a nearby river. She felt drawn to the ethereal, fragile nature of these sculptural rhythms, and to the idea that after completion, the works are honored, appreciated, and subsequently restored to the earth.

In the Kolkata neighborhood of Kumartuli (image below), where many of these image-makers work and live, Cynthia had the opportunity to study construction techniques, the collaborative nature of the work, and the impact of contemporary influences on these traditions.

Concurrently, she explored how she might work collaboratively in a community using these sculptural techniques.

In the next issue, we'll hear more about Cynthia's experience in applying for and completing the Fulbright-Nehru Scholarship. If there is interest, perhaps we might schedule Cynthia to give an image talk at one of our future meetings.

From the Editor

Dear Member,

This issue of your newsletter presents the first of several multi-part articles by two members who describe some unique career experiences. Perhaps their experiences will resonate with you, and perhaps you have similar experiences to share with your colleagues.

The annual ISC conference is coming up, this time in Phoenix (AZ), and I heartily urge PRS members to attend. Last year's conference was outstanding, and this one also looks exceptional. It is an opportunity to meet and share experiences with some amazing colleagues from around the world.

Also, start your holiday planning now: This December we will almost certainly have another holiday party. The plan this year is for the pop-up art show to last a full month, with sales benefiting PRS activities. The theme will focus on small works suitable for dense urban environments (possibly "Folds Flat for Storage", or "Small Works under 12x12x12 inches") ?.

As always, I hope you enjoy this issue of your newsletter.

Happy sculpting!
